

Work-Life Balance @ Magna

While Magna adapts to the current landscape of global manufacturing, some employees may be feeling the change directly. From the shop floor to the office, workloads, deadlines and production demands are evolving. These shifts are common, and it takes time for operations to feel steady again.

The phrase “Work-Life Balance” describes how we flow between our work duties and our personal lives. So, how do we find work-life balance in a changing environment? A good starting point is focusing on what is within our control. Below is a list of suggestions for finding balance at work and at home. Some strategies that work for others may not work for you, so pick options that support your unique situation and schedule.

Tips for Finding Balance:

At-Home:

- Create a transition between work and home, such as a short walk or meeting a friend for a quick coffee before heading home.
- During busier weeks, look for ways to share responsibilities at home and ease the load where possible. Some tasks may need to wait, and that is okay.
- When you are able, prioritize rest and recovery.

At-Work:

- Use Magna’s Open-Door Policy to discuss work-related concerns with your supervisor or team lead, including workload, deadlines, or overtime.
- Take a few minutes each day to organize priorities for the next day. Planning ahead can help make deadlines and changing demands easier to manage.
- When possible, take a short break. Opt for “walking meetings” if available.
- Try Magna’s Employee and Family Assistance Program (EFAP) to access up to 6 phone or video sessions with a certified life coach specializing in topics like work-life balance, career development and life transitions.

Written by Sydney Glac, Health Promotion Coordinator

